Prologue

Even late in the day, the streets of the lower city are thronged with people: peddlers hauling wares by drakeling-cart, entertainers practicing sleight-of-hand, the occasional Spireguard keeping an eye on the rest. Pushing your way through the crowd, you remember what Haro told you when you visited him at the Nave earlier.

"While you were away, I spent some time in the lower city. Members of the Quire have heard rumors of a group there who claim to still dream. They call themselves the Still-Dreaming, as a matter of fact.

"Their leader is one named Ematl, a True Seer who left the Council's service not long ago. I found him speaking to a crowd at the edge of Rats' Refuge, but he and his followers would not speak with me. It seems my return has given me a measure of fame, and the Still-Dreaming are suspicious of those who hear the Dreamsong. Perhaps they will not be so suspicious of you."
